A Word From The Editor

As smart consumers, we all seek to protect ourselves from shoddy items and from dangerous products. We cannot simply rely on any official agency to do it for us, although credit must be given the bodies that do work intensively for our benefit in ways we may not even be aware of. But our first defense, as always, is information. This second issue of ConsumerFocus contains tips for safe purchasing of household items such as bunk beds, surveys your rights as a patient, and profiles how to protect yourself against credit card fraud and damage from power outages. The Ministry of Health offers advice on preventing food poisoning, and Baduk Magazine explains what to do when you finally try to get away from it all and your dream vacation becomes a nightmare.

Happy Consuming!

SAFE SHOPPING

Safe Shopping – Choosing a Bunk Bed

Bunk beds are a popular Israeli solution to the problem of fitting many children into few bedrooms. The market offers many types and models of bunk beds, both locally made and imported. But whatever your taste and budget, keep in mind that a poorly made bunk bed is not just a bad investment—it can be extremely dangerous; the risks range from trapping a child's head or limbs between its slats to complete collapse of one or more of the bunks.

Any bunk bed sold in Israel must receive a quality assurance (tav taken) from the Israel Standards Institute. Before purchasing a bed, ask to see up-to-date certification from the Israel Standards Institute that the bed meets all safety and quality requirements, and meets all criteria of "standard number 4007, section 1."

What else should you look for in a bunk bed? The Israel Standards Institute recommends the following:

- Quality materials (wood or wood-based materials)
- Uniform structure (sides and edges made of one piece)
- Security rails on upper bunks on all four sides. They should be no lower than 60-75 millimeters.
- A sturdy ladder that is securely fastened to the bed.
- Be sure to check the strength of the frame and connecting hardware. Do this both when purchasing the bed, and on a periodic basis following purchase.
- Be sure that the bed comes with clear user instructions.
- Be sure that the surface underneath the mattress allows for some air circulation. A completely sealed bottom is forbidden for use.
- Be sure that the surface supporting the mattress is securely fastened and stable. It should not wobble or move. Be sure as well that the distance between the bottom support and the bed frame is not more than 25 millimeters.

POWER OUTAGES

Power Failures – Don't Let Them Leave You in the Dark!

It's chilly and rainy outside. You heat some hot chocolate in the microwave, position the lamp just so, adjust the thermostat on the electric heater, and find your favorite movie to watch. Then, just as you're thinking that life is just about perfect, everything suddenly goes cold, dark, and silent. Sound familiar? Power outages are a fact of life in many parts of the country. They happen with unpredictable frequency and duration, and while annoying, especially on those dreary winter days, are usually little more than a temporary inconvenience. Keeping a good supply of candles and matches, a working flashlight or an emergency lantern on hand can help. To report an outage, call the Israel Electric Company hotline.

Many electricians recommend that you unplug appliances such as refrigerators and computers to avoid damage in case there is a power surge when the electricity is restored.

While unplugging your appliances can help to protect them, this is not always possible or feasible, and a power failure can result in damage. According to the Israel Consumer Council, if this happens to you, the Israel Electric Corporation should be responsible for compensation for damage resulting from most types of outages. If the Electric Corporation is not willing to assume responsibility and provide compensation, consult with an expert and receive a written, professional assessment of the damage and its cause. If the expert concurs that the damage is a result of a power outage, you can take your case to a Small Claims Court. Many consumers have successfully claimed compensation from the Israel Electric Corporation in this manner.

The Israel Standards Institute – A Brief Profile

The Israel Standards Institute (Machon Hatekenim HaYisraeli) is Israel's official watchdog responsible for preparing and publicizing standards for commercial and industrial products.

Grounded in "The Standards Law (1953)" the Institute determines quality standards for both domestic and imported products. At the same time, The Institute represents Israeli interests to international standards bodies. Together with the Ministry of Trade, Industry, and Labor, the Standards Institute conducts quality checks in shops and stores in order to determine that products meet necessary standards. Results of such surveys are often publicized in the media.

The Standards Institute offers product testing to the public, several times a year, for products such as microwave ovens. These tests are often free of charge.

To find out more, visit the Israel Standards Institute Website: www.sii.org.il.

Consumer Bulletin - What You Need to Know About Glass Doors

Both esthetic and practical, glass doors are common in many Israeli homes and apartment buildings. But wary consumers should know that, according to the Israel Standards Institute, over the past few years the number of injuries, and even fatalities, has been climbing, as a result of faulty installation of glass doors

The Israeli standard (teken) number 1099 is concerned with the security aspects of glazing in homes, including internal doors within apartment buildings, balcony and garden doors, and roof doors. Institute experts recommend using the following types of glass:

- Tempered glass: tempered glass (zechuchit mechusemet) shatters into very small pieces that are less likely to cause injury and do not form sharp shards the way regular glass does when shattered.
- Layered Security Glass (zechuchit bitichut sichva'ot): this type of glass is essentially two sheets of glass with a film pasted between them. If this glass is shattered, the shards remain stuck to the film without flying about, thereby minimizing injury.

Be sure that your glass doors are insulated to prevent moisture seeping in during the winter, and that they can be securely locked. Some people put small stickers or other markings on very clean glass doors in order to prevent others from walking into them.

CREDIT CARD FRAUD

Protect Yourself From Credit Card Fraud

As more people use credit cards for purchasing goods and services, the incidence of credit card fraud or abuse is also on the rise. You can protect yourself by taking just a few basic, easy steps.

Your first step in keeping yourself and your credit card secure is to carefully examine each monthly statement and be sure that you recognize all entries. If your bank allows access to your account over the Internet, it is even easier to monitor your account on an ongoing basis.

Whenever you pay with a card try not to let the card out of your sight. For example, at the gas station leave your car if you have to in order to supervise use of your card by the attendant. When you make a credit card purchase that is charged manually, ask for the carbon copy and destroy it.

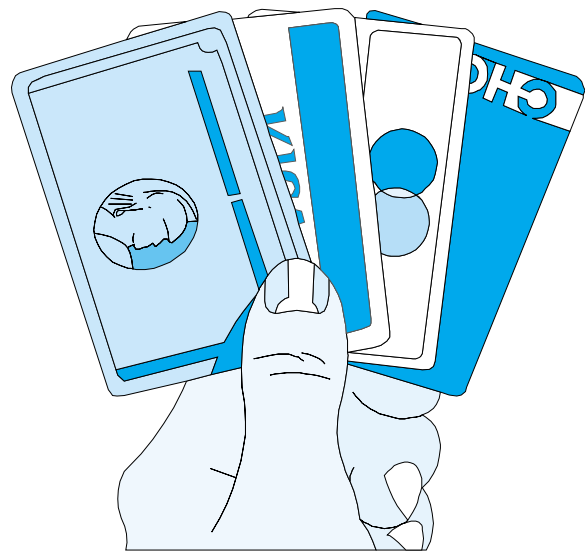

Don't keep your card's secret code anywhere in proximity to the card itself. Do not transmit the code to anyone!

If the worst should happen and someone does gain access to your card, there are laws designed to protect you. Familiarize yourself with your rights, and don't hesitate to exercise them! Here's what every credit card holder needs to know:

- Notify your credit card company as soon as you realize that someone has been using your card. The law protects you from any liability for charges resulting from abuse of your card once you have notified the company.
- If you cannot immediately notify the credit card company, your liability is still limited. The law permits a maximum charge of NIS 75 + NIS 30 per day following discovery of fraudulent use of your card until you notify the company, or, alternatively, the amount accrued by the fraudulent use of the card, whichever charge is the lower of the two. In any event, you cannot be held liable for more than NIS 450.

- The bank must credit your account for funds that were fraudulently withdrawn from it within 30 days.
- If the bank or credit card company refuses to compensate you or credit your account, consult with one of the consumer protection organizations for assistance. See the Resource Guide for details.
- Remember, the law unequivocally states that you cannot be held liable for fraudulent use of a card, for theft of a card, or for abuse of a card!

KITCHEN SAFETY

Kitchen Safety – Pressure Cookers

Pressure cookers are a great way to prepare food quickly and preserve the nutritional value of cooked food.

A pressure cooker operates on the simple principal of trapping steam inside the pot, hastening the cooking process by significantly raising the temperature. Since the food is cooked quickly, they tend to retain a high rate of vitamins and minerals. At the end of cooking, pot will “whistle” and release steam through a special valve.

The nature of the presser cooker method means that proper care and handling is necessary in order to avoid accidents and damage.

Experts from the Israel Standards Institute recommend the following:

- Whenever you purchase a pressure cooker, be sure that it meets all requirements of the Israel Standards Institute, and that it has updated safety certification from the Institute.

- Be sure to keep the valve and free of obstructions. Purchase replacement parts from an authorized importer or dealer only.
- Make certain that your pressure cooker is accompanied by detailed instructions for use.
- Do not buy a pressure cooker with any kind of defect.
- Check that all pieces match the illustrations in the user manual.
- At the end of cooking, be sure that all the steam has been released before opening the pot.
- Do not put your hands or face directly over the pot when releasing the valve in order to prevent painful steam burns.

KITCHEN SAFETY

Health Corner - Avoid Food Poisoning

Advice from the Ministry of Health on how to avoid food poisoning.

Even the most careful shopper or diner is not immune from the risks of contaminated food and food poisoning. Bacteria that cause food poisoning are found on all types of uncooked food, including raw meats, eggs, fruit, and vegetables. If you experience symptoms of food poisoning, including nausea, stomach pain, diarrhea, and fever, consult your doctor as soon as you can for treatment. If you can trace your poisoning to an identifiable source such as a restaurant, you should inform the Ministry of Health (see the Resources Guide).

You can avoid food poisoning at home by following Ministry of Health guidelines for proper handling and preparation of food.

- Be sure to store all food properly. Your refrigerator thermostat should read at least 5 degrees Celsius.
- Meat, chicken, and fish that will not be eaten within two days of purchase should be frozen.
- Thaw frozen meats and fish in the refrigerator or in the microwave.
- Always wash your hands before and after handling food.
- Have separate work areas for raw foods and foods that are ready to eat.
- Be sure that food is cooked thoroughly and served hot. If you can keep your hand on the pot handle for more than a few seconds, it is not hot enough.
- Store dry foods (flour, rice, pasta, etc.) in airtight containers made of hard plastic or glass. Do not use plastic bags, as all kinds of pests can easily chew through them. Store your containers on high shelves.
- Be sure to check items for the presence of bugs and other contaminants before use. Beware of purchasing improperly stored foods.
- Eggs that are improperly handled or stored can cause salmonella poisoning. Babies and the elderly are particularly at risk. Be sure to buy eggs only from air-conditioned shops that sell the eggs in closed, disposable containers. Check that the eggs have a stamp that indicates the name and address of the processing facility, grade of the eggs, and sell-by date. Avoid purchasing cracked or broken eggs.
- Washing eggs before storing them can cause salmonella bacteria to be absorbed through the shell. If you must wash eggs, do so immediately prior to use. They should be stored in a refrigerator, in their original container if possible. Store eggs for no longer than 30 days. Never use cracked or broken eggs for any other purposes than hard-boiling or for baking.

PATIENTS' RIGHTS

Know Your Rights - Patients' Rights in Israel

Patients in Israel are protected by the "Patients Rights Law" (1996), which defines the rights of persons requesting or receiving medical treatment, and protects their privacy.

Within the framework of this law are several specific clauses.

- The Right to Receive Medical Treatment: Any person in need of medical care is entitled to receive it in accordance with accepted conditions and arrangements for providing medical services in Israel. In emergencies, patients are entitled to urgent care without any preconditions. Caregivers or medical institutions are forbidden to discriminate against patients on the basis of religion, race, gender, nationality, country of origin, or for any other reason.
- The Right to Privacy: The right to privacy protects patients from any damage that could result if their medical details were made known, for example, to an employer. Accordingly, a doctor, nurse, or any other health care provider may only release medical information with the patient's signed permission on a special waiver form. The waiver should indicate exactly to whom the information may be given. The patient must sign a separate waiver for each body that they are permitting access to their information. Medical personnel who violate this law are subject to prosecution. Doctors may, however, use their judgment in sharing information with a patient's family. Parents of minors under the age of 18 are entitled to any pertinent medical information regarding their child, and to use that information as they see fit.

- The law requires doctors to report incidences of specific dangerous or contagious diseases to the Ministry of Health.
- Confidentiality extends to medical records, which must be kept in a secure location that prevents any unauthorized access. No person may add anything, or remove anything, from a patient's medical record, once the record has been signed and dated. Patients are entitled to view sections of their records that contain medical information; they are not, however, always permitted access to sections containing impressions of the caregiver regarding the patient's behavior or other personal notes.
- Patients may request copies of their records, but the original records are the property of the health facility.
- The Right to be Accompanied: Patients may be accompanied for treatment by friends or relatives. Persons accompanying the patient are not permitted to interfere in any way with the treatment.
- The Right to Receive Medical Care with Dignity: The law ensures the rights of patients to be treated with dignity and respect.
- The Right to Refuse Medical Treatment: There are no legal means by which to compel a person to accept unwanted medical treatment. A patient who wishes to refuse treatment must sign a waiver releasing medical staff from liability. This right does not always apply to psychiatric patients, or to other patients who may not be capable authorizing treatment. The law does, however, restrict the medical establishment from unjustified use of its authority to curtail the private freedom of psychiatric patients.

PATIENTS' RIGHTS

In emergencies, when patients may not be able to consent to treatment due to their physical or mental condition, the emergency room staff can sign a form authorizing emergency life-saving treatment.

Complaints and Legal Claims

The Public Ombudsman (netziv kvilot hatzibur) of the Ministry of Health is responsible for handling public complaints and inquiries. Any person has the right to lodge a complaint.

Situations that could justify a complaint include refusal to register a person in a health fund, limiting their registration through specific conditions or payments, or cases in which a health fund refuses to provide a service specified as part of the "Basket Of Health Services." The Ombudsman is authorized to recommend appropriate measures to all bodies relevant to the complaint.

If you feel that you have been treated improperly by a health care provider you can submit a complaint to the medical director or administration of the relevant institution. Complaints against a health fund doctor can be submitted to the supervising district doctor (rofeh mechozi). Many of the hospitals have public complaints departments. You can submit your complaint in writing or in persons. Include as many relevant details as possible.

Legal suits, as opposed to complaints, are warranted when a patient or family member seeks compensation for harm incurred as a result of medical treatment. Lawsuits can be justified in cases when damage results from a violation of confidentiality, treatment given without the consent of the patient, contraction of contagious ailments as a result of poor medical or hygienic conditions, and medical malpractice. It is up to the claimant to prove a connection between the treatment and the damage.

Note that while Ministry of Health regulations specify that patients sign a consent form for treatment, it is uncommon to sign for treatment in a clinic or private physician's office. The patient's appearance at the clinic is regarded as consent to treatment, and a verbal agreement is generally sufficient.

YOUR DREAM VACATION

Your Dream Vacation Overseas Became a Nightmare?

Here's what the Law Has to Say

Your travel agent promised you a hotel right in the center of things. And you got one, right in the center of the meat-packing district! Okay, there was a pool, just like you wanted. Too bad that no one told you it hasn't been filled yet. At least the meals were slimming – they were never served! And the air-conditioned car you arranged to rent came fully equipped... with paper fans? What can you do besides laugh it off and hope for a better time next year? The fact is that you do have rights, and there is something that you can do besides gnash your teeth.

If your vacation is ruined because of a failure to honor commitments, poor service, or infringement of your rights, you should consult with one of the consumer organizations, as well as the Travel Agent's Association, which was set up to help deal with consumer issues.

Following is just a sample of some of the cases that have been successfully resolved.

The Price Was a Snow Job!

A.G. booked a week-long ski vacation in the Italian Alps, as well as four nights in Frankfurt, through a travel agency in Israel. According to the agency's brochure, the Frankfurt hotel charged $106 per night for bed and breakfast. The travel agency also added a service fee of $50 for reserving the room.

To A.G.'s surprise, upon arrival at the hotel in Frankfurt, he discovered that the price of a room according to the reception manager was only 105 deutschemarks (about $49). In other words, A.G. was charged more than twice the regular price. The reception manager agreed that the price charged by the Israeli travel agent was extortionate, and provided A.G. with written authorization of the hotel's regular price.

According to the exchange rate at the time, the difference between the price that A.G. was charged, and the actual price of the room, was some NIS 836, which in A.G.'s opinion was completely unjustified. He accordingly requested a refund of the difference from the travel agency.

The agency, in its defense, claimed that it had booked the room through an intermediary agency that processed the reservation and determined the price. In the first agency's opinion, the price disparity was the responsibility of the intermediary agency.

A.G. turned to the Israel Consumer Council, which then requested the first agency to produce a receipt testifying to the transaction between themselves and the intermediary agency; they were told that no such receipt or any other documentation was available. Further inquiries vindicated A.G.'s claim, and the first agency was obligated to refund the difference in prices, together with interest and cost of living adjustments.

A Four-Star Scam

The G. family purchased an organized tour of Ireland and

YOUR DREAM VACATION

Scotland. When they booked the tour, the travel agent offered the option of paying the basic tour price for 3-star accommodations, or an upgrade to 4-star accommodations for an extra $200 (per person in a double room). The G's opted to pay extra for the upgraded accommodations. To their amazement, it quickly became clear that their accommodations, as well as those of some 13 other group members who had upgraded, were no different than those who had chosen the 3-star accommodations. All members of the tour shared the same bus, as well as the same hotel, which more often than not turned out to be a 3-star establishment.

Upon returning to Israel, irate members of the group who had chosen to upgrade pointed out to the travel agent that they had paid extra money for services that they never received, and that there was no justification for charging two different prices for the exact same tour package. The angry travelers claimed that the least that they were entitled to was a refund of the difference ($200 per person).

The travel agency disagreed. However, "in the interests of fairness" they offered to refund each claimant $100, on condition that their claims were dropped completely. The G family refused this offer, and filed a complaint with the Travel Agents' Association. The Association investigated their claim, and as a result, the agency was required to refund the full $200 to each individual, plus filing fees.

An Odyssey of Aggravation

Mrs. B and her daughter sued a tour agent for defective arrangements on an organized tour, and for the resultant aggravation. The two purchased an organized tour to China, Tibet, Nepal, and India. They specified the places that they wished to visit, and stated that they wanted top-level accommodations. The agent was responsible for arranging flights, hotels, tours with local guides, train transport, visas and entry permits, and local representatives who would meet them on arrival and transport their luggage.

According to Mrs. B and her daughter, thanks to the travel agent's incompetence they experienced a series of unnecessary problems and aggravation during every part of their trip, forcing them to waste valuable time trying to clarify and arrange matters that were supposed to already have been organized and completed.

Take, for example, their arrival at the airport in Beijing, where a local travel representative was to have met them, transported them to their hotel, and arranged for tours of the city. Despite the fact that the time of their flight's arrival was known, and even listed in the itinerary provided by the travel agent in Israel, no one was there to meet them in Beijing. Finally, having grown tired of waiting and searching, they telephoned the local travel bureau, who explained that their representative had waited to greet them the day before, which was the date they had been informed of by the agent in Israel.

Mrs. B. was further upset that the full-day tours of Shanghai and Sichuan that they had been promised turned out to be only half-days. The agreement that someone would meet them at the train and help with their luggage was never fulfilled either.

When Mrs. B and her daughter arrived in Chengdu, a local travel representative was to have met them with plane tickets and entry permits for Tibet. This was news to the tourist bureau in Chengdu, who had never been informed of this arrangement. A telephone call to the agency's main office in Beijing revealed that not only were the local agents never meant to supply the tickets and documents, they were not even authorized to. A full day was wasted in phone calls between China and Israel trying to make arrangements that were already supposed to have been in place.

Upon arrival in Nepal, Mrs. B and her daughter soon discovered that there, too, their arrival permits had not been arranged, resulting in more wasted time, arguments, and even being charged a fine. To add insult to injury, the local representative that did meet them had no intention of helping with their luggage. The guide that had been booked for them tried to extort more money each time he was asked to fulfill any of his obligations. Mrs. B's letter of complaint detailed many more such incidents.

YOUR DREAM VACATION

As a result of her complaint to the Travel Agents Association, the Israeli travel agency compensated Mrs. B and her daughter with a free, 11 day trip to Thailand, as well as a 50% discount for an additional person joining them. The trip included round trip airfare, internal flights, and four-star accommodations. Mrs. B was permitted to choose her preferred dates of travel 30 days in advance. The offer was good for two years.

In addition to the kinds of situations described above, the consumer organizations and the Travel Agents Association regularly deal with such common travel-related complaints as overbooked and delayed flights, lost luggage, and substandard accommodations.

Overbooked Flights

Over the past few years, it has become more and more common for travelers to arrive at the airport only to discover that their flight is already full because it was overbooked.

Due to the high costs of air transport, special legislation permits airlines to overbook flights, and to prevent passengers from boarding. However, the law also entitles passengers to compensation of some $50-200, and not less than half the cost of the flight, as well as compensation for expenses such as storage of baggage, telephones, etc. upon presentation of receipts. Compensation is offered on condition that the passenger had reserved a seat on the overbooked flight, and that alternative arrangements could not be made within a reasonable period. The airline is obligated to make this information known to passengers that are refused boarding.

Note also that the law permits passengers to claim other damages resulting from being bumped from an overbooked flight. For example, a business traveler that suffered financial damage can sue the airline.

Delayed Flights

If a flight is delayed for reasons that are not the fault of the airline, such as heavy air traffic or poor weather conditions, the airline is not responsible for compensating passengers. However, if the delay was the fault of the airline, the airline is obligated to pay compensation.

Losing your Place on a Chartered Flight

The law prohibits organizers of chartered flights from selling one person's seat on a flight to another passenger for a higher price. If a charter company is forced to cancel or delay a flight because there are not enough passengers, or to combine one flight with another, resulting in a loss of services that passengers were supposed to have received, the passengers are entitled to compensation for those services.

Lost Luggage

If a passenger's luggage is lost or damaged during a flight, the airline is responsible for paying compensation. The law limits the amount of compensation to some $20 per kilo.

The airlines themselves will often claim that it is the airport ground service luggage handlers that are responsible for any lost or damaged luggage. The law requires services companies to take measures to ensure luggage at the airport. To minimize your risks, be careful to hold on to your luggage claim ticket, and to immediately report any lost luggage to the airline. Be sure to ask for confirmation of your lost-luggage report. If you file a claim for compensation, it should be filed against the airline, the ground services company, and the airport. If it is not clear who was responsible for the loss, the court may obligate all three parties to compensate you.

The consumer organizations also point out that if your luggage contains an item of unusual value, for example an Oriental carpet, it is a good idea to notify the airline of this when you check in, and to arrange for special insurance. This helps you to avoid the problems of limited compensation from the airline.

Unsatisfactory Hotels

Some travelers rate a good hotel as one of the key factors of a vacation, and consider comfort and indulgence a necessity. Others see a hotel as a place to put their head down at night, and don't really care about the frills as long as the place is clean and quiet, or is conveniently located. Travel agents can claim that they are not responsible for any defects in a hotel, and that a dissatisfied guest should claim any damages against the hotel. But this is not always the case. If the travel agent was incompetent in making your arrangements, and books you into a hotel that is known to be substandard, this can be regarded as a violation of your agreement, and you could justifiably file a suit.

For example, if you have been guaranteed a four-star hotel and you find yourself staying in a three-star establishment, or in one without a pool and exercise room even those have been promised, it is your right to transfer to a better hotel, and to claim damages from the party responsible for violating the agreement.

In other cases, you can ask the hotel to upgrade your conditions. For example, if you were guaranteed a room on a specific floor, a room with a view, or a non-smoking room, and you do not receive it, you are within your rights to ask the hotel to make the necessary adjustments.

Unsatisfactory Tour Guides

Your tour guide is a key element in an organized tour. A good guide, who is friendly and informative, can help smooth many of the rough edges of an organized trip, and make it a success. On the other hand, even if you do not personally hit it off with your guide, as long as his professional knowledge meets a reasonable standard you don't really have a basis for complaint. But if the guide is incompetent or unknowledgeable, or runs the tour in a defective way and provides substandard service, you are entitled to file a claim for compensation.

Dissatisfaction with a Tour

A successful tour is the result of many factors all working together, and when someone claims that they "are not satisfied" with a tour, they need to be specific. If your fellow travelers are unpleasant, there is not much you can do. It is not the tour organizer's fault or responsibility if other people talk too much or are consistently late for the bus. Inclement weather or strikes at a location you were meant to visit are unfortunately, but again, not the organizer's responsibility.

On the other hand, foul-ups that the organizer is responsible for can justify a claim for compensation. For example, if the organizer promised an air-conditioned bus or a specific number of meals, and these items are not in fact provided, or if a visit to a promised attraction does not take place because the guide failed to secure tickets, the organizer can be considered in breach of contract, and is liable for compensation.

Be sure to save all copies of all documents relevant to your trip (timetables, receipts, etc.) as well as all guarantees from the tour organizer, including any verbal promises.

Poor Airline Service

Regulations regarding airline security are very strict. While flight attendants are expected to behave pleasantly and to provide service during the flight, anytime that they request a passenger to return to their seat, turn off an electronic device, or to fasten a seatbelt, they are fulfilling the obligation of their jobs. However, if an attendant speaks rudely or aggressively, or behaves discourteously, the passenger may file a complaint with the airline.

Protect Yourself

Before spending money on a tour package, keep the following tips in mind.

Before making any payment, make sure that the agency provides you with written details of your package. Clarify that the quoted prices include such items as port taxes, levies, visa fees, etc.

Clarify whether the price you are paying is linked to dollars, Euros, or other currency, and find out how the price is calculated.

Try to investigate the accommodations being offered and how they are rated. Search the Web for sites with reviews from other travelers. Clarify the number of meals you will receive each day. Find out what itinerary will be, and which attractions you will visit. Clarify whether entrance fees to attractions are covered by the price of the tour. Find out what the cancellation fees and deadlines are.

YOUR DREAM VACATION

The law directs all travel agents or organizations to provide the following information, in writing, to any person who purchases a travel package:

- The total cost of the package, including taxes, fees or any other costs that the purchaser must cover, in Israel and abroad.
- The currency that the cost of the package is linked to, how the exchange rate is calculated, and the amount of interest if the payment is made in installments.
- The components of the package, including information on services not included in the cost of the package.
- Details of the accommodations and their rating.
- The number of daily meals.
- The itinerary of the tour, and the places to be visited.
- Transportation in Israel and abroad, including internal flights and ground or water transport, as well as the name of the airline.
- All information relevant to entry into the overseas destinations on the itinerary, including information on visas, entry permits, and other requirements.
- Guarantees of security of payments.
- Payment deadlines and conditions.
- The conditions according to which the tour can be cancelled.
- Conditions of refund of payments in the event that the tour is cancelled by the organizer, and the refund procedure.
- Conditions of cancellation on the part of the purchaser, including penalty fees.
- A list of agency representatives located at the destinations of the tour, including addresses, telephone and fax numbers, public reception hours, and the types of aid they can offer.
- If an unaccompanied minor is participating in the tour, the agency must supply the parents or guardians with information on how to be in contact with the minor.

SMALL CLAIMS COURT

Your Guide to the Small Claims Court

- Small Claims Courts (Batei HaMishpat LeTviot Katanot) hear civil suits for monetary sum not exceeding a set maximum. Consumers can file suits in Small Claims Court for compensation when contracts or terms of sale are violated, for the exchange or repair of a product, or the cancellation of a transaction.
- You can file a small claim at the magistrates' court whose jurisdiction applies to one of the following locations:
 - the place of residence or place of business of the defendant.
 - the location in which liability was engendered, e.g.,
 - the place where a contract was signed
 - the site intended for the fulfillment of liability
 - the place at which the asset or property was transferred
 - the site at which the act or oversight for which the claim was filed was committed.
- Claim forms (ktavei tvia) and statement of defense forms (ktav hagana) can be obtained free of charge at the Court Secretariat office of any Small Claims Court. The fee for filing a claim is a percentage of the monetary amount of the claim. You must pay the fee by purchasing and affixing 'income stamps' (bulei hachnasa) to the form. Income stamps are obtainable at any post office branch. Be sure to attach any documents that support your claim, including receipts, professional opinions and appraisals, and prior correspondence. Make sure that the defendant is a legal entity, i.e. an individual or a corporation. Write clearly and precisely the full name and address of the person or company. If possible, indicate an individual's father's name and identity number (mispar zehut). You need to submit at least three copies of the claim sheet to the Small Claims Court. You retain one copy, and one is sent to the defendant. Ensure that your copy has been stamped 'received' ('nitkabel') and dated. For each additional defendant or witness, you will be required to submit an additional copy of the form. Copies of all of your supporting documents must be attached to each copy of the form.
- On the day of your court proceedings, bring all relevant documents, as well as any witnesses. If you summon a witness to testify who refuses to appear, you may obtain a subpoena that will require that witness to testify.
- Neither the plaintiff nor the defendant is entitled to representation by an attorney or any other envoy before a Small Claims Court. Parties are free to seek legal counsel before the proceedings, and may be assisted by an attorney in the preparation of claims and statements of defense.
- You can appeal a verdict of a Small Claims Court within 15 days from the decision. Appeals should be in writing, and sent, along with a copy of the verdict, to a District Court judge.
- In order to implement a court decision, send the liable party a written request for the compensation ordered by the court (be sure to retain a copy for yourself.). If this request is ignored, or the party refuses to pay, you may open a file for the enforcement of a court ruling. Bring a copy of the verdict, certified by the court in which it was given, to an Enforcement Bureau (Lishkat HaHotza'a LePoal). Enforcement Bureaus can be found at any of the Magistrates' Courts. Fill out a form detailing the liable party and the steps you would like to be taken against them. You must also pay a fee, which is added onto to the compensation already awarded to you, along with any other expenses involved in enforcing the verdict.

Resources

This directory is designed to be a general guide to the resources that are available to consumers. Note that the Ministry of Immigrant Absorption does not recommend or endorse any particular body or service. It is up to each individual to investigate and decide upon the most appropriate source of assistance.

The ConsumerFocus staff has done its best to include all bodies that offer consumer service. If any organization was inadvertently left out, we apologize for the oversight.

The Director of Consumer Protection Ministry of Industry, Trade and Labor

(Hamemuneh LeHaganat HaTzarchan)

E-mail: consumerprotection@moit.gov.il

The Director of Consumer Protection is responsible for enforcing the 'Consumer Protection Law' of 1981. This includes prohibitions against misleading consumers, against exploiting consumers in distress, and against misleading advertising. The law also applies to consumer information, regulation of advertising directed at children, regulation of product labeling, and protection against fraud in door-to-door sales, sales of vacation apartments, and sales by telephone or other electronic means.
